THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO

PHYSICS DEPARTMENT

1. The first part of the experiment is to determine the mass of the electron. This is done by measuring the deflection of a beam of electrons in a magnetic field. The deflection is measured by the distance the beam travels in a given time. The mass of the electron is then calculated from the deflection and the time.

2. The second part of the experiment is to determine the charge of the electron. This is done by measuring the deflection of a beam of electrons in an electric field. The deflection is measured by the distance the beam travels in a given time. The charge of the electron is then calculated from the deflection and the time.

3. The third part of the experiment is to determine the ratio of the charge to the mass of the electron. This is done by measuring the deflection of a beam of electrons in both a magnetic and an electric field. The ratio of the charge to the mass is then calculated from the deflections and the times.

4. The fourth part of the experiment is to determine the mass of the proton. This is done by measuring the deflection of a beam of protons in a magnetic field. The deflection is measured by the distance the beam travels in a given time. The mass of the proton is then calculated from the deflection and the time.

5. The fifth part of the experiment is to determine the charge of the proton. This is done by measuring the deflection of a beam of protons in an electric field. The deflection is measured by the distance the beam travels in a given time. The charge of the proton is then calculated from the deflection and the time.

6. The sixth part of the experiment is to determine the ratio of the charge to the mass of the proton. This is done by measuring the deflection of a beam of protons in both a magnetic and an electric field. The ratio of the charge to the mass is then calculated from the deflections and the times.

7. The seventh part of the experiment is to determine the mass of the neutron. This is done by measuring the deflection of a beam of neutrons in a magnetic field. The deflection is measured by the distance the beam travels in a given time. The mass of the neutron is then calculated from the deflection and the time.

8. The eighth part of the experiment is to determine the charge of the neutron. This is done by measuring the deflection of a beam of neutrons in an electric field. The deflection is measured by the distance the beam travels in a given time. The charge of the neutron is then calculated from the deflection and the time.

9. The ninth part of the experiment is to determine the ratio of the charge to the mass of the neutron. This is done by measuring the deflection of a beam of neutrons in both a magnetic and an electric field. The ratio of the charge to the mass is then calculated from the deflections and the times.
